Tinley School Is Winner In Health Poster Contest

Just previous to the "Health Week" proclaimed by the State Department of Health, the children of all the schools in Bremen Township were asked to enter a Health Poster contest, for which the County Department of Health and the local health officers offered 3 prizes, first prize to be a five dollar gold piece, second prize three dollars and the third prize two dollars.

The number of posters made and the splendid artistic value of the one, went to prove the interest taken in Health by the Teachers and the class co-operation existing between the Teachers and the newly enlarged county department of health.

Three schools in this Township have won the Crusader's Button for keeping the health rules of the Modern Health Crusader, and are now working for the National Penit in the same organization.

The prizes for Posters were awarded as follows: First prize went to Ethel Loveland of the Arbor Park school in Oak Forest, 2nd prize to Lyril Francis of the Tinley Park school and 3rd prize to Virginia Walsh of St. Christopher's school at Midlothian. Other posters worthy of mention were made by the following pupils: Lawrence Luct, Tinley Park public school; Robert Friess, Angeline Baugun and Martin Wolf of the Arbor Park school in Oak Forest; Dorothy Robinson, Emily Backstahler of Len Small school in Midlothian; Frederick Hardy and Henry Bladen of Dist. 142 school Midlothian; Lawrence Barret Dist 141 and Ida Zapric Dist. 144.

Following the Health Poster contest on May 1st, "National Child Health Day" was the opening of a Health Station in Midlothian which is being sponsored by the Midlothian Woman's Club, and the Cook County Department of Health and is open to Mothers in Bremen township to bring their babies for examination and advice as to feeding etc.

Dr. Earl Pronger of Blue Island conducted the first conference. Mr. Woerheide of Midlothian gave the use of his real estate office for this meeting. Mrs. Dillon of Midlothian and Miss Kennedy of Tinley Park who are on the Health Committee of the Club, rendered valuable assistance in bringing mothers and babies who lived at a distance to and from the meeting.

Kreis-Krapp Wedding Is A Fashionable One

The most fashionable wedding yet celebrated in the St. John Evangelical church at Mokena took place Sunday evening, when Miss Elfrieda Kreis, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Wm. Kreis and Roy Krapp, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Krapp, were united in marriage.

Promptly at eight o'clock at the close of the evening service, following the singing of "O Promise Me" by Mrs. Mable Mall, the bridal procession marched down the isles of the church to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, Theodore Freitag of Naperville a cousin of the bride, presiding at the organ.

The bride was given away by her brother, Arthur Kreis. At the altar the couple were met by Rev. Wm. Kreis who read the service and tied the nuptial knot.

LaVerne Krapp of Mokena and Dorothy Freitag of Naperville, cousins of the bride and groom, were flower girls, the former being attired in pink, and the latter in blue satin. They strewn lilies-of-the-valley as they walked down the aisle. Following them came little Orvella Freitag, the ring bearer who was dressed in white satin. The rings were concealed in the heart of a large satin rose.

The bride was beautifully gowned in a white satin creation with silk net overdress. She wore a long tulle veil and carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley.

The matron of honor was Mrs. Mabel Garets of St. Louis, a cousin of the bride, who was attired in a gown of Nile green. Miss Wauneta Oswald, a close friend of the bride, was the maid of honor. She wore a gown of orchid color and carried a shepherd staff and lavender lilacs.

The bridesmaids were Misses Alma and Wilma Stammer of Chicago, cousins of the groom, and Miss Hearta Perschera. The former were attired in apricot and peach colored crepe de chine and carried bouquets of lavender sweet peas and yellow daisies. Miss Perschera was gowned in maize colored crepe de chine and carried a bouquet of sweet peas. The groom was attended by his cousin Clarence Folkers of Frankfort. The ushers were John Martj of Chicago, Clifford Knudson and Harold Spiess of Mokena, and Rudolph Freitag of Naperville.

At the close of the ceremony, Mrs. Mall sang "I Love You Truly" after which the bridal party retired to the church parlors where a reception was held and dinner served to ninety-five guests.

The bridal couple left the same evening on a wedding trip by auto the destination of which they did not reveal. Upon their return they will reside in Mokena where the groom has a cozy newly built home ready for his bride.

OLD FRANKFORT SCHOOL FOR SALE

The old Frankfort school house, long a landmark of that village is now up for sale by Levi Doty who recently bought the building at public sale. The auctioneer only got a bid of $100 until Mr. Doty began to bid and finally the structure was sold to him for $310. Mr. Doty is willing to sell it for $400. He has made the suggestion that if eight farmers would club together and invest $50 each they would get more lumber than they could buy anywhere else for the price. The old school house stands alongside of the new building and Mr. Doty invites the public to compare the two. He will be at the old school Saturday and Memorial Day or he can be seen at his home by anyone interested in the building. There is much good lumber in the old building which is in a good state of preservation.

Mr. Doty says the new school is going to cost the taxpayers $50,000 by the time it is paid. It was at the request of the County Supt. of Schools Aug. Maue that the state inspected and condemned the old school building in 1924. Upon instruction from the office of the Supt. of Public Instruction, Mr. Maue directed the board of school trustees to withhold the state distributive fund from this district.

Mr. Doty fought the building of the new school house on the ground that its cost would make the tax a burden for the people of the district.

Story on Ousting of Frankfort Teacher Causes A Flareup

The article relative to the ousting of the Frankfort school principal on an intoxication charge as printed in last week's News-Bulletin has caused a great flare-up in Frankfort.

The News-Bulletin is not in the field to stir up animosity, but when an article is printed which hits certain conditions, the spirit of resentment is most naturally aroused.

Some of Frankfort citizens feel aggrieved over the publication of the article mentioned saying that tho. the case is as published, it should not have been known.

The article in question concerns purely local conditions seemingly, which have arisen since the recent Village election, when the Wets and Drys of the village clashed. Much feeling has been existing since then on both sides.

Efforts have been made by the aggrieved Frankfort citizens to have the Editor reveal the name of the writer of the article, but this we cannot do, nor will we, if for no other reason then, that would be breaking faith.

Suffice it to say that the writer of the article in question is thoroughly responsible, whose name is signed to the article, and what other comment was made on other local conditions outside of the school affair can be backed up by sworn affidavits.

Signed affidavits sworn to before a Notary Public regarding the school principal case were filed with the County Supt., of schools before the principal was ousted.

The author of the article, which has caused such a flare-up, has since its publication shown the Editor that the statements made can be backed up by sworn affidavits leaving no question as to their veracity. When such array of facts is presented, a news paper would not be true to its calling if it refused to open its columns to the same.

The News-Bulletin is accused of knocking Frankfort as a town, but this is not true, as only certain local affairs were hit by the article in question. We have no fight with the people of Frankfort for they are among the best to be found anywhere.

FORMER RESIDENT DIES.

Mrs. Caroline McIntyre, a former resident of this section, died Sunday in Oak Park, Ill., and was buried Thursday afternoon in Marshall cemetery.

Tinley Park is going to have the honor in the near future of boasting a real modern department store, this being the plans of H. C. Vogt, proprietor of the well known Bremen Cash Store. He has already placed orders for a large assortment of stock and will be able to sell as cheap and perhaps cheaper than the city stores. Watch for Mr. Vogt's opening announcement. He is a live wire merchant and will undoubtedly make a big success of his new department.

Some yellow backed, scatter brain, has started an unfounded rumor that the NEWS-BULLETIN was going to quit business, and we have had a number of people ask us if this is true, and our answer is: NO! DECIDELY NO! for the NEWS-BULLETIN is here to stay, and we are having very good support in advertising, subscription and job printing, so why should we quit?

Of course we have stepped on some sore toes and no doubt those who have felt the sting of some of the NEWS-BULLETIN articles, wish it were so, but their wishes are in vain.

If any direct proof comes in our hands as to who originated this yarn which is the product of either a hateful mind or of a hair brained gossip, we will make them come to time.

The Editor.

She lit her lamp, but her fingers slipped over the glass, and it fell to the floor with a crash that startled all the echoes in the old building. The smoky wick flared up. Joan turned it down with difficulty until the blaze was extinguished, and staggered to the bed, amazed at her weakness.

She could not keep her eyelids open, and she let them close wearily. But sleep was far from her, and still she listened. And after while an unmistakable sound reached her. Somewhere within the institute she heard a key turn in a lock.

It was the slightest distinct sound, but it cut the darkness like a knife. And to her mind, the sound, which might mean nothing, might be, indeed, the key of Lancaster's door, seemed like the snap of a trap.

She slept and could not waken. Or, rather, she did not sleep, could not have slept; yet sleep had paralyzed her limbs and left her brain untouched; and her mind seemed preternaturally acute, so that she felt and saw everything that was happening in the building.

Someone was coming along the passage, as on that night before. The hand was upon the door. Through her closed and paralyzed eyelids Joan yet seemed to see the figure of a madwoman. Something was in her hand. It was the revolver which Joan had left upon the little table beside her.

Mrs. Dana stood over her, the weapon aimed at her, while her eyes sought her face.

Was she dreaming? Joan had waited through agony of centuries, and the woman was gone. Once more there was silence everywhere. And still she lay there, helpless, feeling all and knowing all, and that it had been no dream, but the prelude of worse to come.

It was strange, but she did not once picture Lancaster as in danger. It was as if the unchained spirit of evil, impotent to harm him, sought another victim. She waited, it seemed for aeons. And the blow fell.

She heard a man's scream of fear, dimmed through her ears distantly, with the accompanying pistol shot. Yet she was unable to stir, and it passed into her memory, as of something infinitely long ago. Presently there came the hum of voices, chattering cries, bare feet that ran wildly along the corridor without, hands at her door.

It was Mrs. Fraser's voice. Now, with a mighty effort, Joan shook herself free from the spell. She staggered from the bed and groped her way across the room.

Nobody was at the door now, but when she unlocked it a whirl of smoke burst in. Smoke filled the passage. Upon the floor beneath a woman was screaming. There were voices outside, and the sound of men running along the passages, but Joan could not locate them.

She staggered through the smoke, feeling for the stairs. It blinded her. She fell into a wall, felt a rigid body before her, and perceived dimly Mrs. Dana's face, wearing a look of exaltation.

She had come too far; she had reached the door of Mrs. Dana's room. Through a break in the smoke cloud Joan saw that the door was closed. Behind it someone was hammering. Then Myers' screams broke through the din and confusion. He was battering against the door, and the strong door, built to resist such pressure, refused to yield. His cries were terrifying. Under the door came little creeping tongues of flame.

Joan caught at Mrs. Dana. "Come with me!" she mumbled. "Come!"

The woman stood rigid as a statue. She felt like marble to the touch, but there was the same exaltation upon her face.

"Open the door!" whispered Joan with her last strength, and pointed. "Open it! Somebody is locked inside."

Myers was yelling as Joan had once heard a horse yell, trapped in a burning stable. The wood of the door was smoldering. Joan tried to reach the key. But the rigid body barred her way.

Then she heard her name called through the smoke. At the cry Mrs. Dana snatched the key from the lock and began to run along the corridor. Joan saw her dimly through the enveloping smoke. She staggered, and fell into Lancaster's arms.

That was her last effort. Incapable of speech, she felt him bear her along the passage, where the smoke clouds were now shot through with streaks of flame. They thickened about her. Lancaster was carrying her down the stairs now, while hungry flames sprang at them from the walls and floor. He was staggering drunkenly when they reached the hall below.

He placed her on the grass, and plunged back into the flames. The institute was ablaze, fire streamed from the roof and windows. A group of villagers, clustered upon the lawn, looked on helplessly. Joan saw Jenkins, leading the matron, approaching her. She tried to tell him that Lancaster had gone back; she could not speak, but he understood her.

"The doctor's safe," he said, and as he spoke Joan saw Lancaster among a group of men who had gathered about something wrapped in a blanket.

He rose and came to her. That was all Joan remembered.

And for days and nights her memories of the past were cut short with Lancaster's return that night, borne back by the power of her love flung across the miles between them. She knew that he lived, and as the nightmare of the end filtered into her mind there came with it the sense of an abiding peace, as if the past was dead, with all its terrors.

Sometimes she felt that Lancaster was beside her; but when at last complete consciousness returned Joan found herself in bed in a strange house. Through the windows she could see the outlines of the familiar mountains, glided in the red sunset glow against the blue of the sky. Beside her sat a figure which seemed to be so remotely of the past that it was difficult to refrain from laughing at the incongruity of the sight.

It was Jenkins, with his black head. As Joan stirred he turned toward her. "That's right, Miss Wentworth," he said heartily. "Now you've rounded the corner, and I reckon the lane lies straight before you."

"The doctor did not steal that money," murmured Joan weakly.

Jenkins laughed as if her words amused him immensely. "Why, Miss Wentworth, you've been saying that to me every time you woke these five days past," he said, "but I couldn't ever get you to tell me how you knew it."

"I don't remember saying it before," said Joan.

"I reckon you've been pretty weak, Miss Wentworth. But tell me now how you know it."

"I don't know. Why, yes, of course I do. Doctor Lancaster couldn't steal anything. Where is he?"

"I'll fetch him, Miss Wentworth. He wants to see you; he's been sitting beside you for days waiting till you really woke up."

"I'm not burned, Doctor Jenkins?" asked Joan in alarm.

"Not the least little bit, Miss Wentworth. I'll bring you a mirror."

"No, I take you on trust. What made me so ill, Doctor Jenkins?"

The doctor hesitated. The old obstinate look began to close down on his features. But Joan caught him by the arm ingratiatingly.

"Come, now, tell me," she said.

Telephone to Teach Better Enunciation

Men who are trying to improve telephone service believe that the telephone will teach its users to speak clearly—not with one conversation, but in the course of time. And, certainly, business would be expedited with perfect enunciation over the telephone. Even a simple name like Dix, say, when passed over the wires may become almost anything—and then it is spelled for verification, thus: "D for Dan, I for Ike, X for X-ray"—words as difficult as the one to be understood.

Progress in plain talking does seem to lag, in the opinion of The Nation's Business. Any optimism in that direction is blighted by the hash in our daily speech. Ideas seem to have transmission as much by telepathy as by telephony. "Wassatyougotado 'nightruh?" But a jumble of letters will make sound and so may give a message to sophisticated ears. The eye is more expert than the ear at registering words. Whoever was fooled by the blanks in the penny dreadfuls of the long ago? The d—s were promptly accepted at their full brimstone content, but a curse by tele-

"Did he—did he inject morphine into me?"

"No, Miss Wentworth," said Jenkins, unable to hold out. "It wasn't morphine. It was curare—the stuff that paralyzes the motor nerves without destroying consciousness." His face grew somber. "It doesn't leave traces, as morphine does, and that devil had put it into morphine bottles and made the doctor think he was a morphine fiend. They hoped to kill him more quickly, but somehow he got used to it, and I guess they were at their wits' ends when you came along. But I'll call the doctor, Miss Wentworth."

When he was gone Joan lay back on her pillows, looking out into the mountains. She knew what had occurred that night; in her drugged state she had seen the whole dreadful picture: Myers unlocking Mrs. Dana's door and leading her to her own room, where she had obtained the revolver; her journey to Lancaster's room, bent on her dreadful mission; the murder of Lawson, in the room opposite, instead, for reasons which would never be known, but were certainly providential.

She saw further, by the same intuition which told her that it had been Mrs. Dana's body wrapped in the blanket upon the lawn. Myers, knowing her to be drugged, and believing Lancaster dead, had waited in Mrs. Dana's room and given her the matches, on her return, with which to start the fire, hoping thus to make sure of his victims and cover up his tracks. And he had fallen into the trap he had baited. Strong as he was, there must have been a stronger Power fighting him with Mrs. Dana's arms that night, when she turned the key in the lock and left him to die as he had willed Joan should die.

But Joan knew that no word of this would ever pass between Lancaster and her. And indeed, as she lay back and looked across the fields toward the mountains, she felt that something had turned that page, so that it had become not only of the dead past, but unreal in a way, and only the present peace existed.

She heard a quick step without. Lancaster stood in the doorway, came toward her, knelt at her side and took her hands in his. And with that even the memories of the past became tenuous, half forgotten.

"Dear, it has come true," he said tenderly.

She lay happily in his arms, looking out all the time toward the sunset on the hills. There was so little to say, because their lives were only beginning.

"I don't want to go back to Avonmouth," she said at length.

"Nor I, Joan. This is our country."

"It must always be our country. But—but the fight, John?"

"I have stolen a march on you, my dear," he answered gayly. "I have fought out my fight while you were ill. I have resigned from the hospital; nobody guesses anything there; and I have convinced the trustees here, by my appearance, and by the presentation of certain papers happily discovered after the fire, that I am a responsible, moral person, honest enough to head the new institute which we are going to build—guess where!"

She looked at him. Then—

"That village in the mountains," she cried happily. "Where our lives really began. I could not wish for anything better."

"And the patient is going to be our porter. And Doctor Jenkins will be house surgeon, resident, with his wife—Joan, he didn't tell you about Mrs. Fraser? Jenkins! Jenkins!" His voice rang through the little house. "Come in at once and face the fire like a man, instead of slinking away into your consulting-room, you ruffianly young benedict!"

Lower First Cost and Upkeep

There is a double economy in the Ford Car that materially lowers the cost of motoring for the millions of Ford owners today.

First—a Ford Car is the lowest priced on the market—the least expensive car the automotive industry has ever produced.
Second—it costs less to operate and maintain. Fuel consumption is low—you get high mileage from tires. Repairs and replacements are infrequent; and charges, even for the labor involved, are small.

The Ford Weekly Purchase Plan makes it possible for anyone to buy a Ford on

Belleau Wood, of Glorious Memory

Larger numbers of soldier dead of the Second division are buried in Aisne-Marne than of any other organization, because it was at Belleau woods that this division became immortal in driving out the Germans in July, 1918, although suffering tremendous losses.

They fought to give us Peace, and lo!

They gained a better Peace than ours

Graves of Heroes Not Forgotten

IT IS one of the ironies of a soldier's fate that he may be lionized in a moment of need, only to be utterly forgotten after the smoke of battle has cleared. Throughout the world the tragedy of the soldier ignored and neglected after he has given the best of his youth and vitality to his country is a spectacle which distresses the eye of even the most casual observer, ex-Major Namm of the Fifth division, A. E. F., writes in the New York Herald-Tribune. And if it be so with the living, what must it be with the dead?

But the corollary does not necessarily follow. So far as America is concerned, the dead are being cared for. No one can visit the great cemeteries of the battle areas without realizing the sanctity that is being preserved about the graves of the fallen, without sensing the beauty of the tribute that is being paid by tender hands dedicated to that sole purpose. Row upon row they lie there, like men in a profound sleep, content with their martyrdom, yearning for no awakening.

Only one thought comes to disturb the peaceful picture. Unfortunately, not all of the dead are there. Some of the fallen have not had the grace of a decent burial. Of the seventy-odd thousand American soldiers who died overseas more than two thousand never have been located, and still are being carried on the records of the War department as "reported missing." And of all the phrases that were flung into circulation by the war none has been a more poignant source of pain, of hope, of doubt than those two words which announced the fate of a boy to be unknown. To thousands of American mothers and fathers that phrase "reported missing" has repeated itself almost daily for the last seven years, provoking all manner of speculation, yet forbidding any definite conclusion.

Tragedy of the "Missing." What, after all, had become of him? If dead, why was his body never found? The vision of him lying in some shell hole, unseen, unguarded against the spoliation of earth and time, or cast up suddenly and sacrilegiously by some laborer's spade—that vision is not one to allay parental anguish. On the contrary, dead though that body be, so long as it has not been laid to rest it seems to have voice, a voice which cries out to loved ones at home.

And here it must be remembered that "reported missing" does not necessarily mean that the soldier has been killed. It yields room for hope, but hope mingled with grave concern. He may have survived, although badly hurt, and that conjecture suggests the possibility of his lying helpless in some hospital or wandering around Europe bereft of strength and reason. Again, he may have been neither killed nor hurt, which opens up a new field for speculation and the fear of something worse than death—desertion.

What is being done to lift the veil of mystery which enshrouds the missing? Are they to remain officially forgotten? On the contrary, although it requires time, skill and unremitting effort, the work of tracing the names, of recovering the bodies, of replacing in some cases members that had been scattered by shell bursts, of establishing the identity of the whole and of burying it finally alongside of the comrades with whom the "missing" one had fought and died—all that is being done quietly and diligently by the American Graves Registration service.

Tribute to Heroic Dead

The last ceremonies, at the graves of the overseas dead of the navy and marine corps, when the heroic dead of the war time are laid to rest at Arlington cemetery. Photo shows the colors dipped as the resounding notes of "Taps" are played.

In France. Each month brings the recovery of more bodies; each week brings a reduction, even though slight, in the number of missing, and with the continuance of this work under direction as intelligent and conscientious as it has had in the past the time may yet come when most of the missing will have been accounted for and the fears and doubts concerning them will have been stilled.

Many "Unknown."

The important work of searching and accounting for the missing was begun by the fields units section of the Graves Registration service immediately after the close of the war. The task proved to be extremely difficult. Records of burial made under battle conditions were not complete, for bodies had been hastily interred under fire and the terrain had been subject to many transformations. The first search of the battle zone in the fall of 1918 and in the spring of 1919, therefore, met with but little success.

It was not until November, 1923, that the Graves Registration service became free to resume an organized and systematic effort to search the records for the missing, to recover unlocated bodies. At that time an officer who had seen four years of service in the field was detailed to the Paris office and placed in charge of the records, investigation and research department. He was especially equipped for the task in that he had served in the infantry and was thoroughly familiar with battle terrain, and also because he had a knowledge of anatomy which was exceedingly useful in the work of establishing identity between dismembered parts, where a shell, as often happened, had played particular havoc with the victim.

Good Work Going On.

That officer organized a series of units which are now serving in all the battle zones where Americans fought, and under his direction the work has progressed steadily and successfully. Unfortunately for the service, under the operation of the "Manchu law" which requires every officer to serve one year out of five with troops, the man who until recently was in charge of the task has been compelled to return to America. The work, however, will be carried on by his successor.

From January 1 to July 1 of 1924 the units engaged in the search recovered and established the identity of 125 bodies, or at the rate of 5 a week. They also recovered 29 bodies on which identification could not be established owing to mutilation and corrosion that had taken place with the passing of time.

These results can only be regarded as remarkable and foster the belief that the time is not far distant when the search for missing heroes of the World war will be crowned with complete success.

How Robert M. Koenig Found Remedy for Pimply Skin

For years my skin would break out every once in a while—and ointments did very little to help me. I read a doctor's article stating that pimply skin usually comes from the stomach—and bowels not getting rid of the poisons. I tried Carter's Little Liver Pills for a few days—and since that time my skin is smooth and clear. Now I tell my friends the right way of getting rid of a broken out skin—and also of steering clear of upset stomach and sick headache. Carter's are all you claim for them.

It's a wise man who can appear stupid at times, but some men carry it to excess.

Why That Bad Back?

Is backache keeping you upset? Feel all tired out—so nervous and dispirited you can hardly keep going? Then look to your kidneys! Your kidneys rid the body of poisonous waste. But if they lag, impurities accumulate and poison the whole system. The one is apt to suffer backache, stabbing pains, headaches, dizziness, and other annoying kidney irregularities. If your kidneys are sluggish, help them with a diuretic. Use Doan's Pills. They are praised the world over. Ask your neighbor!

An Illinois Case

Mrs. Ira McIlwain, 1910 Jackson St., Sullivan, Ill., says: "My back gave out and I had sharp, stabbing pains through the small of it. I had dizzy spells and was nervous, too. A tired, worn-out feeling often came over me and my kidneys acted sluggishly. Doan's Pills cured me and I have had no trouble since."

STRIKING FEATURES OF NEW STAR COUPSTER

Flexible door windows that may be lowered or raised like pullman car curtains and that disappear within the top of the body when raised are a striking feature of the new Star coupster.

In reality the coupster is a convertible car, affording all the comforts of closed car transportation, yet convertible into an open car by the simple expedient of raising two disappearing windows—a five-second operation. For all practical purposes it is two cars in one.

EFFICIENCY AND SAFETY OF CARS

Numerous Devices Add to Comfort and Satisfaction of Owner.

It is difficult to believe that the oil pressure gauges and the amperemeters which now appear on the instrument boards of virtually all makes of cars were once regarded by many as unnecessary frills. Today there are a number of accessories being offered which are similarly regarded, which is the same as saying that they would be appreciated if only their advantages were better known.

By equipping a car with some of these fittings, greater satisfaction, efficiency and safety will result. Add front and rear bumpers to the car, attach one of the many rear signaling devices, keep a set of anti-skid chains handy and the car will be enormously benefited in proportion to the cost of the protection. Frequently such safety devices add to the car's appearance and thus not only help protect the owner's original investment, but add to it. A spotlight attached to the windshield and played upon the road may prevent wrecking the car in a ditch.

Take efficiency as another instance. A car that is operated without proper regulation of the cooling system is at all times running inefficiently. This is especially true in winter when the engine is constantly operated at the wrong temperature, either boiling over because the radiator is covered with the lap-robe or running cold because there is no covering at all. The market now offers several radiator covers with openings which can be operated from the dash.

Along the efficiency line are other devices which are destined to filter the gasoline before it is admitted to the carburetor, thus preventing the entrance of dirty or watered gasoline to the carburetor or engine. A device of this character may pay for itself within a month after it is installed. Then there are shock absorbers, which in addition to giving greater riding comfort, save the springs from breakage on the rebound and thus increase the usefulness of the car by preventing breakdowns. Even cutouts which were at one time regarded as toys for the speed maniacs are now shown to have a very important use. Regardless of the selling points of each accessory or all of them as a group, it is a fact that any one of them adds to the second-hand value of a car. So the motorist not only has the use of the accessories with which he equips his car and the savings on insurance, inconvenience, repair bills, etc., but he gets a return premium when he goes to sell the car.

Good Advice Is to Give Machine the Once-Over

There's economy, also satisfaction in giving your car the once-over in the spring, then if it needs replacements or anything else to bring it back to perfect form, have it done as quickly as possible.

Naturally the toll of a year's driving is most severe, and generally there is a reminder or two. Right here the old stitch in time principle works out. When the car is restored to its best shape, almost as good as the day it was bought, riding in it is far more enjoyable, also it will bring a much better price if you care to sell or expect to trade it in on a new car.

Letting your motor car run down is false economy. Eventually it costs you more and in the interim you are not happiest when riding along the highways.

Even little things which you may think are of no special consequence develop into big items in repair bills if allowed to run on without interruption.

Windshield Rattle

When the windshield glass becomes loose in its frame, it causes an annoying rattle. It is very difficult to close the frame so that it will grip the glass more securely without the possibility of breaking the latter. If the glass is not too loose the rattle can be eliminated by filling the space in the frame with shellac. This can be applied with a sharp pointed stick or a brush and should be applied slowly so that it will pack tightly in the opening.

WATER INJURY TO TIRES IS SMALL

Running Through Stream Is Not Injurious.

Now and then in the course of an automobile trip a car has to pass through a stream, and the question is sometimes discussed whether the action of the water is harmful to the tires. The same question arises when the car is out in a heavy rain.

Such a wetting is practically nothing at all, either for damage or improvement. At any rate, the effect on the tire is not harmful. Two chief constituents of a tire are rubber and cotton, both vegetable substances, and as a rule water does not injure vegetable matter. As illustrative of this point, there is the old but true story of the farmer who, when one of his rubber boots fell into a well, placed the other on a shelf in a closet. Twelve years later when the well was cleaned the lost boot was found to be in excellent condition, but the boot on the shelf had fallen into ruin.

If running through a brook resulted in cooling a tire the effect would be decidedly beneficial, but a quick dash through the water has little effect on the heated air within the tire and consequently the temperature change in the tire after its bath is negligible.

Water itself apparently does no harm to tires, but the combination of air and moisture commonly known as humidity is very destructive, especially on the cotton in ordinary fabric tires. The moist air works in between the layers of the fabric and rots them out, sometimes even before the tires leave the dealer's storeroom. Cord tires stand humidity better.

The harmful effect of moist air is the chief reason why, when tires are stored, they should be kept in a dry atmosphere. As sunlight is also harmful, the storage place should be darkened.

Shabby Tires Are Not Favored for Any Car

Shabby tires on a good-looking car! Yet stand on any street corner today and count the number of patched-up, dilapidated tires which are being used to the last mile. The cost of keeping these tires running for a few thousand miles would nearly pay for new ones. Mileage such as this comes high.

Tire conservation does not mean picking up a decrepit tire and putting it back into service at a big repair cost just to save a little rubber left in the tread. It means taking care of the tire from the first so that it will be able to deliver all the mileage built into it by the maker. When tires are so far worn that they are soon to blow, it is poor economy to repair them. Such a course means sacrifice of the inner tube as well.

Cheap, makeshift patches, boots and temporary repairs of all kinds are now being called into use as never before, but patching up an old casing in which separation of fabric plies has already begun, cannot give the freedom from tire trouble on which the pleasure in motoring so largely depends.

Tying in Spring Leaves Will Prevent Spreading

Since the leaves in a spring have a tendency to spread apart, it is often hard to replace the spring tie-bolt in autos or trucks.

The easy way is to grip the head of the tie-bolt in a vise, and put all but the last four leaves one on top of the other. The last four leaves are put on crosswise, or spread around like the ribs of an umbrella, which allows the nut to be easily started on the bolt.

With the nut on the bolt, swing the bottom cross leaf into place. Then each succeeding leaf will slide easily into position. Then tighten the tie-bolt nut. Of course, the clamps on each end will have to be removed until the spring is assembled.

Anything These Days

Running downhill recently a driver found to his utter surprise that a motor truck, supposedly at rest in the downhill position on the right side of the road, was actually going uphill backwards. The driver could not get it through his head for a moment and nearly lost control of his machine trying to do it out, which showed that he was not prepared to expect most anything nowadays. The truck driver was utilizing the lower gear ratio of reverse in order to enable the engine to pull up an extra heavy load.

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill all the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and c. are not in the definitions.
